

Many changes evident among Upland residents

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Much of Upland's history is rooted in the city's southeast section, among the downtown shops, tree-lined streets and vintage homes.

Age has begun to take its toll in the city's neighborhoods where many of the buildings date back to the turn of the century.

There has been renovation. A modernized downtown and a new civic center. But there are signs of age at nearly every corner.

Once a segregated community, southeast Upland still has problems with racism and prejudice, some residents say. They are optimistic, however, about the community's future.

Boothe's Market has been a landmark on Foothill Boulevard for nearly 60 years. It has survived the change that has occurred throughout the neighborhood.

Owner Robert Boothe, clad in a green apron, looked out the front of his shop at the bustling street.

"When my grandfather built this place in the early 1920s, Foothill was nothing but a two-lane road," he said. "We used to be right on the edge of town."

"Upland has sure grown up since then."

He remembers that as late as 1940 he would hike north of 13th Street to hunt. That same area — once nothing but groves and brush — is several blocks south of the point now considered the geographical center of the city at Redding Way and 16th Street.

The southeast neighborhoods were once located in the very heart of town. Some of the houses are nearly 100 years old and in need of renovation.

Most of the area has already been filled in with homes, but in the few spots where new construction is taking place, the old sits beside the new.

Housing isn't the only part of the southeast in transition. Many residents belong to families who first settled the area, and are fighting the same battles with age.

An increasing number of younger couples are moving in, however, finding the older housing more affordable. City officials estimate the average age of residents is gradually becoming younger.

Southeast Upland is a community divided into many neighborhoods. For purposes of city management, it is considered the area south of 13th Street and east of Euclid Avenue. Many residents draw the imaginary line at Foothill Boulevard, several blocks to the south, and still others are more specific, confining it to several neighborhoods in the area.

Wherever the line is drawn, age is always a problem, and there are many efforts devoted to revitalizing the community.

"People have found it's more economical to spend $5,000 to $10,000 in renovating older residences than it is to tear them down and build a new house," said Upland Planning Director Bill Young.

Density limits of four-to-six dwelling units per acre were raised in the 1960s to up to 30 per acre, with noticeable results.

"What happened in many places," said Young, "is in order to accommodate growing families and larger households, residents would tack on illegal room additions in back yards or on top of garages."

"The area just can't sustain those kind of densities. The streets needed to be wider, the sewer systems were inadequate as were the water lines and there wasn't enough in the way of recreational and educational facilities."

A report came out in May 1978 that dealt closely with each neighborhood in the southeast, suggesting stabilization of existing neighborhoods in good repair to avoid fragmentation of individual lots.

Young said the intent was not to lock in density limits "for time immemorial," but to try to make living conditions better for those who choose to make the area their home.

As a result, the city has received a block grant which is being used on several public works projects as repairing streets, sidewalks and curbs. The city has received $1,878,240 over the past five years for projects of this sort.

Money is also available to owners of homes in the form of grants and low-interest loans.

Emil Marzullo, a community development planner for the county, said 14 rehabilitation loans have been awarded since 1977, to repair 138 homes in the southeast section of the city.

Phyllis Gardner lives near Fifth Avenue and F Street, an area she said was known as "Myers' Corner" years ago in honor of her family.

present at the incident, he was aware that the lives of several victims and police officers were in "imminent danger" due to the actions of the youth and his associates.

"It is my opinion that the decision in this matter constitutes a gross injustice," he said in the letter, "not just to the police officers and victims involved in this crime, but to all the citizens of San Bernardino County."

The robbery attempt began with the abduction at gunpoint of two Mervyn's managers from their homes in the middle of the night. The men were taken to the store and forced to open safes while police surrounded the site.

The youth in question was reported to have said "if I go down, I'm going to take someone with me," and police investigation findings said he then loaded his gun to make good the threat.

The suspects then fled through a roof vent, and three were apprehended the next day in Montebello. The fourth suspect was caught several days later.

He added that having been

"I was born on 11th Street, where my aunt served as midwife," she said. "For a while we lived next door here, and this (indicating her living room) was my grandmother's house."

She attended Fannie D'Noe Elementary School, and remembers Hispanic children being sent to their own school to the north.

It was a time of segregation. Baudelio Sandoval recalls some of the problems in an oral history recording made for the Upland Public Library.

"There was only one store that would sell us food," he said. "It was owned by an American. All the other stores had signs that said 'White Trade Only.'"

Sandoval said he suffered no ill effects from the discrimination, except when he bought his first home in Upland.

The building was owned by one of the Chaffey brothers who helped found the colony. Several years after Sandoval moved in, a neighbor approached him with a petition asking him to leave.

Sandoval went back to Chaffey, who discovered the signatures on the petition had been forged, and successfully solved the problem.

"Oh yes, things are much better than that now," said an elderly Hispanic man who asked not to be named. "There are problems, I suppose, but not the same kind of problems."

"Now it seems to be more the younger people against the older."

Although most residents are quick to praise the pleasant neighborhood and tree-lined streets, many will admit there are problems.

"It's just been in the last five, maybe 10 years," said Mrs. Gardner. "We all used to get along very well — the Hispanics and the Americans — but things haven't been the same."

Her husband Terry agreed.

"I used to go with some of my Mexican friends to the bars, but then they started saying, 'Hey, it might be better if you don't come in here with us.'"

"They're my friends, but they're scared. It's not good for them to have white friends," he paused.

"I've grown prejudiced, I think. I really have."

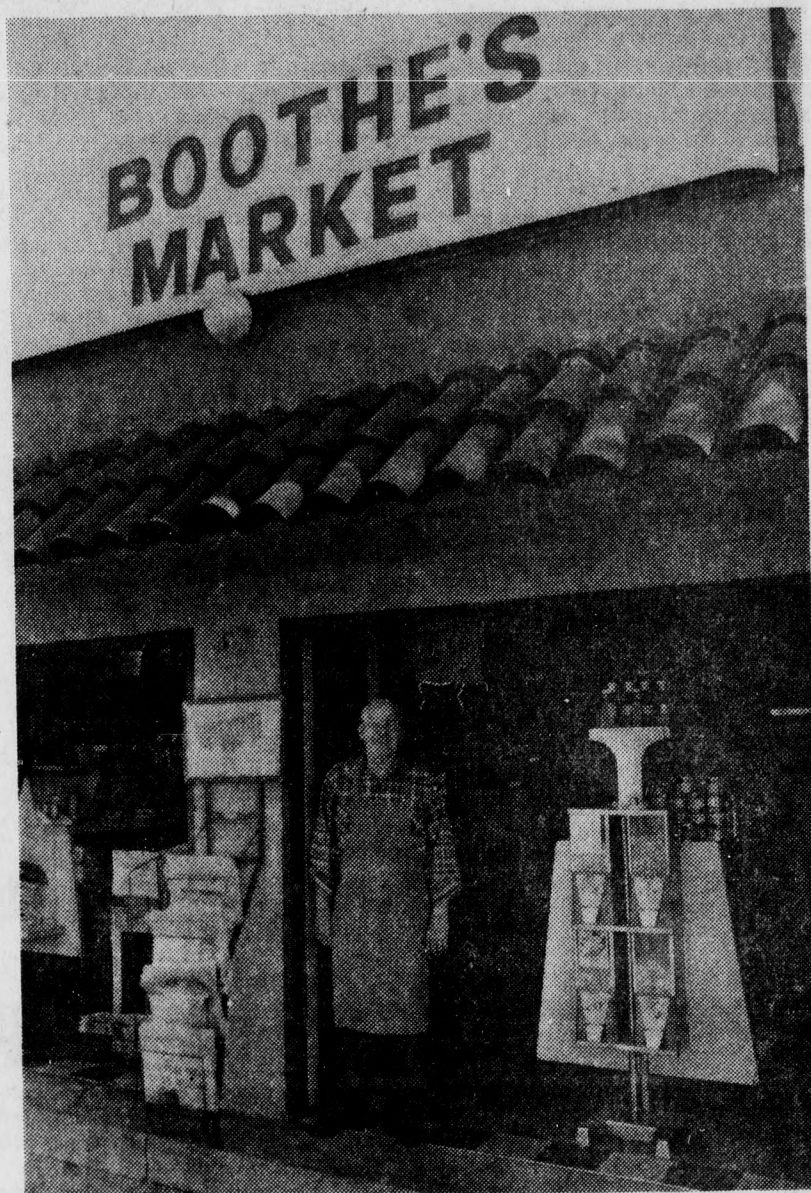

The Gardners used to handle an active group of Cub Scouts in the neighborhood, but now that their own sons are older they find they've drifted out of any involvement whatsoever.

"That's the worst part," said Gardner. "My wife and I have really dropped out — a sort of apathy."

Mrs. Gardner said that apathy was a problem with only a very few, although that colored the entire relationship.

"I finally dropped out of the PTA when I found how they were using the Spanish people for their own means. These women, my friends, ended up doing all the work."

soon as their sons get out of high school. They have bought property in Washington and will move in a couple of years.

Meanwhile, the Boothes are closing down the market, and putting it up sale or lease, but only because "we're tired after 36 years of business."

One Hispanic woman admitted there was tension in the neighborhood, particularly with the young, but she felt much of the problem was exaggerated.

Upland Police Chief Coy Estes agrees.

He said most calls the department gets are for disturbing the peace — loud noise, parties and the like. In a random review, he found commercial burglaries, automobile and petty theft were at roughly the same level as for the rest of the city. And there are fewer residential burglaries in southeast Upland than elsewhere.

"This (lower) rate is traditional since I've been with the department," said Estes.

Youth in the area have divided it into several small communities such as Ghost Town and Dogpatch. Ghost Town, generally agreed to be in the area bordered by 11th Street and Arrow Highway, west of Campus Avenue, got its name from the fact that anyone being pursued can disappear quickly there, according to local legend.

Dogpatch is the neighborhood south of Ninth Street.

The Gardners say they have suffered harassment from people stoning their home, killing their dogs, and stealing their children's bicycles. Mrs. Gardner said she has been hurt several times, once with a concussion that put her in the hospital.

"I have no prejudice," she said. "Most of my neighbors are still my friends. It's just feelings of fear after I got hit in the head the first time."

Many parents feel that with a little more attention, the southeast's problems could be turned around, and that one positive step would be to provide more organizations and facilities for the children. But they feel other residents of the city just aren't interested in the investment.

Jennie Ruiz, who grew up in the community and has seen the change in attitudes, says the most important thing is to care.

"Southeast Upland? It's just like an old dress," she said. "When it's new, it's presentable — pretty and bright. As time goes on it becomes worn, then not washed or cleaned, so you put it away in the corner and forget about it."

"North Upland is new — it's pretty, fresh and green — but people still come to old Upland for the necessities like the hospital, City Hall, police and fire departments."

"We just have to get people to realize you can fix that dress up, and it will add something to the whole wardrobe."

County forms redevelopment agency

The county Board of Supervisors formed a redevelopment agency Tuesday to serve the unincorporated areas of the county and named Supervisor Robert Townsend chairman of the agency board.

Procedures and organization of the redevelopment agency occupied much of the board action during the meeting. Supervisors took on the role as agency directors, and future meetings for the agency will be a regular part of the board's afternoon sessions on Mondays.

In other action Tuesday, the board agreed to reconsider Monday's decision to hold an election on flood-control assessments in March instead of Nov. 4.

The move came at the urging of San Bernardino Mayor W.R. Holcomb, whose city may hold its own, separate November election for storm-drain assessments if the board does not change its decision.

A special board session was scheduled for 4 p.m. Thursday.

Townsend, who suggested the idea of a county redevelopment agency earlier this year, said later he has been told the agency is the first of its kind in California for unincorporated areas.

He added that Chino Hills is one area the redevelopment agency will be reviewing.

Supervisor Bob Hammock was named vice chairman of the agency board of directors.

Uplander helps victims of Hurricane Allen

By KEN SWART
Staff Writer

When she knew Hurricane Allen had hit the Texas coast, local Red Cross volunteer Bea Tozier grabbed her already-packed suitcase without a second thought.

She worked as a volunteer there in the wake of flooding 10 years ago. She was there again after a 1971 hurricane. She left for a third time Aug. 10.

It has been two weeks since the storm ripped apart the state's port area, but the 51-year-old Upland resident is still there, helping to pick up the pieces.

Tozier is working as the supervisor for a disaster center at Aransas Pass, a small Texas town located about 20 miles northeast of Corpus Christi.

The disaster center is one of several still providing food, clothing and shelter to residents of the huge 10-county area hit by severe winds and rain.

"This was supposed to be the worst (hurricane) of the century — people expected the worst — but it wasn't as bad as everyone thought," she said.

It was, however, bad enough, said Tozier, a 27-year veteran of the Ontario Red Cross chapter, a former chairman of the board and now chairman of volunteers.

A fellow volunteer, Bette Pruneri of Ontario, recently was sent to the same general area to help the many remaining disaster victims, Tozier added.

According to her figures, a total of 253,870 people were evacuated for varying lengths of time; 12,928 families have had their homes damaged and 291 are still living in shelters; 4,947 people have been injured — 248 seriously enough to be hospitalized — and five people have died.

Tozier recalled that when she flew into San Antonio, Texas — the disaster center staging area — on the night following the hurricane, all roads leading out of the area were blocked with debris and completely impassable.

"It was very frustrating for me ... there I was in San Antonio, knowing I was needed somewhere else and not being able to get there," she said.

After the delay, however, she was sent to Aransas Pass, a small city of 5,000 people where she had worked as a Red Cross volunteer several years ago.

She now heads a staff of about a dozen paid and volunteer workers, who are investigating claims by families and offering them appropriate assistance.

Even if it's as simple as replacing a child's school clothes, "We try to have people feel they're as back to normal as possible," Tozier said.

"People down here have been through hurricanes before so they pretty much know what to do — and they know they can count on the Red Cross for their emergency needs," she explained.

"Almost everybody here is still waiting for federal disaster loans," she added. The Red Cross helps get the applications processed faster.

"It's not our job to upgrade their way of living — we don't have that kind of money," she said. "All we can do is take care of whatever their emergency needs are now."

County underwrites study for possible Chino dairy preserve

A $50,000 study, to determine the future course of the 17,000-acre dairy preserve in the Chino area, has been underwritten by the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors.

The study will be undertaken jointly by the county's planning staff and the agriculture department at UC Riverside at the request of the Chino Valley Land Use Committee.

It will determine whether it is practical to relocate the dairy industry to another part of the county as well as the financial impact on the county from other uses of the agricultural preserve.

The proposal is the outgrowth of several earlier meetings between the committee and the planning staff over the future of the dairy industry south of Riverside Drive and east of Euclid Avenue, which now can only be used for agriculture.

Trustees consider land sale

Eight community residents and District superintendent Dr. John D. Randall have been appointed by the Mt. San Antonio College board of trustees to serve on an Advisory Committee to study the possible sale of campus surplus property.

The specific land under discussion will be a small, 6,900-square-foot triangle at the southwest corner of Temple and Grand avenues. The board, in 1966, declared the property "surplus" and offered it to lease.

The current lease holder, Leland and Leland Company Inc., appeared before the trustees in June with a request to purchase the land which is contiguous to the company's property. The trustees then directed the staff to proceed with Education Code requirements for the possible sale of district land. The formation of the committee is part of that process.

The committee's first meeting, open to all interested persons, will be held on Thursday, Aug. 28, at 7:30 p.m. in the board room, bldg. 4, rm. 235.

"Anyone wishing to speak to the subject is cordially invited to do so," Randall said.

State orders law center plan changed

By JIM MARXEN
Staff Writer

State officials have told the county to come up with a different plan for a law and justice center on property adjacent to Cucamonga-Guasti Park.

Norman Hongola of the state's department of parks and recreation said plans presented by county officials last week were not acceptable.

The county purchased the 17-acre site using state park funds but decided last year the land would suit the need for a law and justice center.

The center would be designed to take over the functions of the current law and justice center at Mountain Avenue and Sixth Street in Ontario — a center that is considered overcrowded by county and local officials.

Despite the need for a new center, the county's plan has run into opposition from school boards and city officials in Rancho Cucamonga and Ontario.

Hongola said the state's main objection to the county plan was that it did not successfully incorporate parking and recreational uses of the site.

"Their design really wouldn't function effectively," he said. "It would provide very minimal recreation. We can't condone using park land acquired with the state park money for other proposed uses."

Hongola said the county's plan spread the center's parking out among recreational areas in an attempt to blend the center with the existing regional park.

The result, he said, would be to cut up the recreational land on the site to a point where it could not be used for recreation.

In addition to the plan, the county proposed "swapping" 12 acres of land on the east side of the regional park for the land purchased with state park money. Hongola said such a move could be accomplished if the county comes up with an acceptable design.

"They're going to have to come up with a proposal that would limit the center to a corner of the land and maybe move the parking across the street."

Hongola, who supervises park grant money for the state, said he is restricted by law from allowing land purchased with park money to be used for other purposes. He said similar cases involving less land have been settled by a land-trade.

class planning

10-year reunion

Plans are in the offing for the 10-year reunion of the Chaffey High School class of 1971 and the planning committee is arranging several fund-raising functions.

The committee invites all interested class members to attend the next planning meeting to be held at 7:30 tonight at 590 E. Cumberland in Upland.

Committee members include Jim Hoover, Cathy Adams Merki, Debbie Tundis Carpenter, Matt Merki, Myra Rothschild Hoven, Anna McKay Hoover, Chris Kahlanbeck Bennett and Art Carpenter.

Persons knowing the whereabouts of class members are asked to call Cathy Merki at 987-0136.

The reunion is tentatively scheduled for May 1981 at the Disneyland Hotel in Anaheim.

Housing census

The Census Bureau will launch its annual survey of housing this week.

The survey will look at a sample of 90,000 homes across the nation, which represent a cross-section of American housing.

The interviews are expected to take about four months. Households selected will be mailed an introductory letter before the visit. For unoccupied units, information will be obtained from landlords, rental agents or neighbors.

"I treat my policyholders like individuals, not numbers... each one has different insurance needs."

From Job Corps

Woman gets new start

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Three years ago, Lynn Baker admits her future looked pretty bleak. Her parents were divorced before she started kindergarten, and she always seemed to have trouble in school. By the time she became a teen-ager she was a habitual runaway, eventually made a ward of the court and bounced from foster home to foster home.

She refused to attend her ninth grade classes, but was passed anyway. After three months in 10th grade she quit school for good.

With no skills and little education, there were few options open to her. Today at 20, Baker has her graduate equivalency diploma from high school and a well-paying position as a carpenter's apprentice that promises both a career and a future.

The turnabout came when her social worker told her about the Job Corps program, which is designed to train young people from 16 to 21 in both academic subjects and trades to give a second chance to people like Baker.

And according to her, it works. Baker was approaching her 18th birthday when she would no longer be cared for by the state. The girl had to make some decisions about what she was going to do, and thought she might give Job Corps a try.

The first center she attended was in Utah, where Baker studied bookkeeping and clerical typing. The center offered skills ranging from auto mechanics to wiring, but the only area she "absolutely despised" was cooking.

"It was like a jail," she said remembering the Utah site. "Twelve-foot fence with barbed wire on the top, security guards, the whole bit."

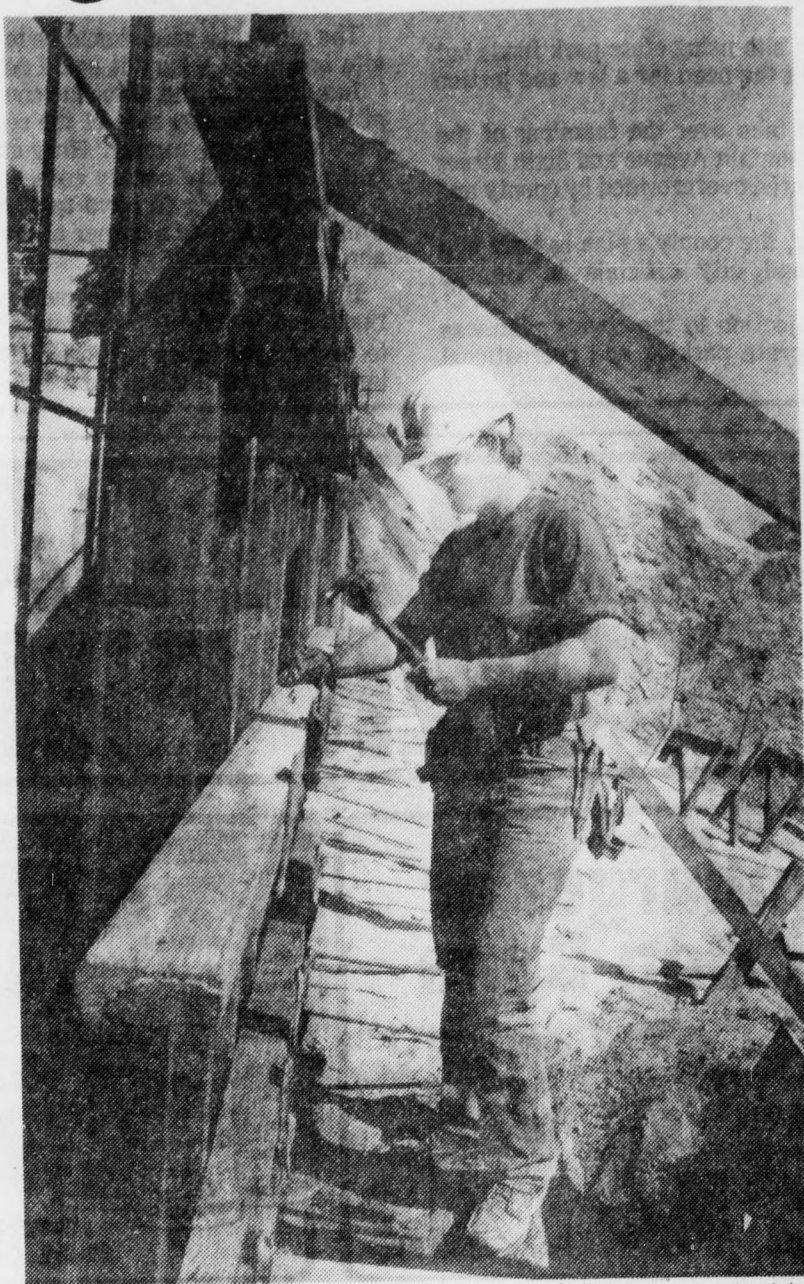

But, she admits, "it was a good deal."

"If you follow the rules, they feed you, clothe you, give you a place to stay and a little money each month. But if you goof off, you're out of there quicker than you can blink."

Drugs, alcohol and sexual activity are explicitly forbidden at the camps and involvement with any of the three is grounds for immediate removal.

Baker got along well, however, except she found she couldn't get excited about her trade. After a year in a California car wash, she went back to Job Corps.

"My biggest dream has always been to build my own home," she said, "so I decided I wanted to get into carpentry." The program she needed was in another center, and after four months she was transferred to South Dakota.

Lynn Baker plies her new trade as carpenter in Ontario, thanks to the Job Corps program that taught her the necessary skills.

"It was beautiful. No fences or guards — freedom. We were known by our names rather than by social security numbers."

She scored well enough on the high school equivalency exam to have Job Corps pay for two years of college. In early June, Baker completed her carpentry training and by the end of the month had landed her current post with the Guy F. Atkinson Co. where she is helping to expand the Ontario International Airport runway.

After four years as apprentice, Baker will qualify for journeyman status, earning more than $13 per hour.

Tall and broad-shouldered, Baker fits in well with the rest of the crew and says she's pleased with the way things are going.

She's living with her mother now, but looks forward to finding a place of her own soon. As to the future, Baker has another dream to fulfill — learning to drive heavy equipment and trucks.

Lest anyone think her job unfeminine, she said she spends her off-hours crocheting and collecting stamps. "The guys at work will kill me when they find out," she laughed.

In all, the last year has been a good one for Baker.

"Job Corps is no bed of roses," she warned, "but if you're willing to put yourself into it, you'll really get something back."

Sister saved her life

Kidney recipient, donor lead normal lives 12 years later

By STEVE STANDERFER
Staff Writer

For Sophie Anduss, the only time she really thinks about it anymore is each Aug. 14 — or Kidney Day as she sometimes refers to it.

It was 12 years ago that the Ontario woman underwent surgery in a Texas hospital to receive a new kidney from her older sister, Blanche Hayes of Rancho Cucamonga. Since the operation both have led active lives. And each is anxious to talk with others about their experience to ease fears regarding kidney transplants.

Sophie, 43-year-old mother of two, speaks positively about her experience.

"I had been sick for a long time and they (doctors) didn't know what it was," she said. Sophie complained of feeling tired all the time and would frequently fall asleep.

What started out as a light-hearted comment to Blanche in 1966 would later turn out to be a life-changing question.

"I was told 'one of these days you may need a kidney transplant' and I said 'Hey Blanche, would you give me one of yours?'"

"In 1968 I found out my kidneys were failing," she said.

That news resulted in Sophie being put on a dialysis machine periodically to cleanse out her system — to perform the work that her kidneys no longer could.

She adds that she was fortunate to be put on a dialysis machine since there was a long waiting list.

She was then living in Texas, where her husband was in the Air Force. "It was just by accident that some captain came by and said they were doing transplants at Lackland Air Force Base."

Her husband sent out letters to her nine brothers and sisters seeking compatible kidney donors.

Only three were found to be healthy enough to donate a kidney, she said.

After being brought to Texas for a week of extensive tests, Blanche was chosen out of the three as the best possible donor.

"They said I would have a 50 percent chance of the kidney taking and not rejecting," Sophie said. For her, surgery seemed a welcome relief to the dialysis which she went through every few days.

"I was scared of the dialysis machine...but as far as going through surgery, I wasn't (scared)," she said.

"It was just bound to work." She was confident in the knowledge that she had so many potential donors — her brothers and sisters.

Aug. 14, 1968 arrived.

"They took an artery and a kidney from me and put it in her and it started working right away," said Blanche.

"Someone had to give her one or she wasn't going to live," she said.

"I think I was only the third one they had ever done in the military hospital. I have a lot more energy than I did," Sophie said. Her only limitation now is a ban on playing hard contact sports — which, she adds, she wouldn't do anyway.

To some, giving up a kidney or receiving one may seem like a frightening experience.

But Blanche insists that "there's nothing really bad about it. You can lead a normal life...some people think you can't but you can."

"I felt I have given her 12 more years and I feel it's worth it to me."

Chaffey teachers receive increase

Teachers and administrators in the Chaffey Joint Union High School District were given a 10.25 percent salary increase, leaving only classified employees still in contractual discussions with the district.

Trustees ratified contract reopeners negotiated between teachers and the district that will give teachers, in addition to a salary increase, complete medical and dental coverage.

The adjusted contract will be in effect one year.

Management employees of the district, who do not formally negotiate, were given in addition to the salary increase, full premium cost of medical benefits and a $25,000 life insurance program.

The district's classified employees are negotiating a new contract this year and are continuing discussions with the district.

General Dynamics missile passes test

General Dynamics Pomona Division's shoulder-fired, heatseeking Stinger air defense missile has passed the Army's qualification flight test by scoring five hits in six attempts against aerial targets at White Sands, N.M., missile range.

During the test, the production model Stingers intercepted three subscale airplane target drones flying at high speeds and two stationary targets which simulated hovering helicopters. The primary objective of the qualification flight test was to prove the production missile's flight and seeker systems.

Test requirements established by the Army prior to the 10-day test program stipulated that five of six missiles tested must successfully engage a target.

The Army required that missiles involved in the qualification flight test be subjected to an environmental conditioning process in which the missiles were dropped, vibrated, submerged in water, and exposed to a variety of other adverse conditions.

Sales of video cassettes brisk

Adult films popular in West End

Individuals who wish to privately watch adult movies can rent or buy video cassette tapes of the films and screen them on home video tape recorders. And the popularity of the films is boosting business at area tape dealers.

"We are doing about 30 percent of our business in adult films and 70 percent in 'straight' films," said Mike Gallardo, owner of The Video Station in Montclair. "Most people who order them do so out of curiosity and they go both ways — getting both X-rated and other less provocative films."

There is no single type of person who purchases the tapes, he says, "but our clientele is pretty wealthy because video cassettes are now a toy for those who can afford them."

"The customers buying X-rated tapes are really about the same as our other customers, and they often buy adult and regular films," said Jim Robson, assistant manager of the Wherehouse in Montclair Plaza, a store that specializes in records but has begun selling video cassettes.

The firm doesn't rent the films, but about a third of the titles is offers for sale are X-rated films. Nevertheless, Robson says, "only about 10 to 15 percent of our sales seem to be X-rated films."

"The adult movies are very popular for bachelor parties," said Giocondo Gallardo, co-owner of The Video Station. "We've had as many as 11 tapes go out at one time for a party."

But men aren't the only customers.

"A lot of women come in to rent and buy them," she said. "It used to be that only men would openly pick them up, but that's different now."

Renting X-rated video tapes isn't cheap. The tapes cost $10 to $20 for a 24-hour rental.

Similarly, purchasing X-rated films costs more than buying "straight" films, but most can be obtained for under $100.

The popularity of adult films varies says Mike Gallardo. "It does follow what is playing at the adult movie houses, but there is a good market for older titles too," he said. "That's because there is a generation of people who have not seen the films when they were released."

Gallardo said his most popular recent films are

"Insatiable" and "Blond and Black Silk." Titles of "classic" adult films frequently requested include "Deep Throat," "Devil in Miss Jones," and "Behind The Green Door."

"We try to casualize as much as possible to make the clients comfortable," he says, "but the fact that we have a new, open store that is not in the sex business helps out."

The inventory is definitely slanted toward popular films with G, GP, and R ratings and they outnumber the adult films by nearly 2-1.

"There has never been anything like the video tape adult market," Mr. Gallardo said. "In the privacy of your own home you don't have to sit next to someone who is uncouth, and now you are able to get both sight and sound."

The video tape rental and sale market is expected to grow extremely fast and industry projections predict that in two years one in every 10 homes will have a video recorder.

Although the market for both adult and other video tape films is expected to grow, few firms are currently in the rental and sales business because of the complex laws and regulations regarding copyrights and royalties for motion pictures.

A few adult book stores and sex paraphernalia shops also rent and sell cassettes as part of the business but their operations are reluctant to discuss the extent of the business and the impact it may have on other parts of their enterprises.

Nature took 230 million years to carve canyon

By BETTY PEACH
Copley News Service

Ice, wind and water erosion created the swirls and streaks in the sandstone walls that make Canyon de Chelly a distinctive corner of Arizona.

And the elements were in no hurry. Geologists estimate the canyon has been in the making some 230 million years.

It is a monumental achievement. Sandstone walls are pink, lavender, ochre, wine red or deep purple, depending on the sunlight and shadow and the hour of day. Wall color changes as you go deeper into the canyon and its tributaries.

The maze has been occupied over the centuries by Indian tribes. The Anasazi, the "Ancient Ones" probably go back to 200-450 A.D. Each tribe left its own legacy.

Various Indian cultures built substantial homes. Some were rock pueblo-types, tucked into caves. Most were on north walls of the canyon, where the winter sun reached the caves and kept them warmer.

By choosing cave sites high up the walls, cliff dwellers avoided the deep chill of the damp canyon floor. They gained the additional protection from enemies by being out of reach from the bottom and out of sight from the top.

To a certain extent, these cliff-dwelling Anasazi were pioneers in solar heating.

Stone turrets at the base of cliffs resemble small castles. Basementlike pits lie below or near most of them, although intervening floors have long ago disappeared.

The name "de Chelly," pronounced "de-shay," is a corruption of Tsegi — "day-shay-aa" — the Navajo word for the canyon. It is the only drive-in canyon of its size. One does not go down steep, narrow trails, such as Bright Angel Trail, to the bottom of Grand Canyon.

Near Chinle in northeastern Arizona, visitors enter the canyon on horseback or as passengers on wooden benches in the back end of a four-wheel-drive truck. Only Navajos who live in the canyon may drive their own trucks or cars in.

The road is a broad, almost dry, bed of Rio de Chelly. Experienced drivers know which trails to follow to avoid occasional surface water and pockets of quicksand.

As the truck meanders up the wide streambed, stands of willows and cottonwoods indicate where the underwater river lies.

Sheltering canyon walls rise on both sides. Small farms, peach orchards, thatch hogans, clusters of sheep, fields of corn, and a few Indians on horseback appear as the truck winds deeper into the canyon.

Canyon de Chelly is not one but a dozen or so canyons, branching off into two main divisions — Canyon de Chelly on the south, and Canyon del Muerto to the north — each with many finger canyons.

Although they left no written language, the early Indians left some clues to their way of life through the pictographs scratched into walls. One etched in white against a deep red facade shows more than a dozen Spanish conquistadores on horseback riding through the canyon.

The network of winding, steep-walled canyons was the scene of bloody battles among Indian tribes, between Indians and early Spanish and between Indians and the Federal troops. Defending Indians could retreat to high caves, remain unseen, and hurl rocks and arrows.

But they had a disadvantage in their hiding places, as well. If a siege continued and they were short of supplies, there was little chance for escape.

The battles fought in and for the magnificent canyon extended over centuries, and claimed many lives.

Now it is populated sparsely by Navajo families, many of whom live there only in the summer, tending flocks and gardens. In winter, they move to Chinle, so the children can attend school. Chinle also has accommodations for visitors to the canyon.

Late spring and early summer are especially beautiful in Canyon de Chelly. Early light lends a special patina to the steep walls streaked with manganese and iron oxide that drips like rain stains from the canyon rim.

A visit to the awesome canyon floor is a trek back through history to the earliest geological times.

The cliff-dwelling Anasazi who once inhabited these ruins in Canyon de Chelly in northeast Arizona were pioneers in solar heating. Wind and sun took thousands of years to carve and color the canyon.

Three West End cities exceed sales averages

By RICHARD PERAZA
Staff Writer

Three West End cities surpassed state averages by increasing taxable sales more than the 17.9 percent inflation rate during the first quarter of 1980.

Ontario and Montclair, meanwhile, failed to make real gains in taxable sales during the first three months of the year.

Rancho Cucamonga, Chino and Upland all showed sizeable increases in sales compared to the first quarter of 1979. Both Rancho Cucamonga and Chino increased sales 23 percent, a real gain of 5.1 percent after allowing for the inflation factor. Sales in Upland jumped 19 percent, a real gain of 1.1 percent after inflation.

Montclair had the biggest decline of West End cities — a 14.9 percent drop after inflation. Ontario nearly broke even, losing about 1.9 percent.

The state didn't fare well either, according to Ernest J. Dronenburg Jr. of the State Board of Equalization.

He pointed to figures indicating the state increased sales 14.1 percent over last year, netting a better-than-expected $33.3 billion. But the inflation rate ate up that gain and more, leaving the state with a real loss of 3.3 percent.

The figures weren't surprising in light of the fact that California buyers lost 5.9 percent of their buying power. Personal income increased by 12 percent, according to state figures, not nearly enough to keep up with inflation.

West End sales did follow state trends in gasoline sales. No West End city reported its service stations with less than a whopping 40 percent increase in sales in the first quarter comparisons.

Dronenburg said the state's service stations took 18 percent of all retail sales dollars in 1980 compared with 13 percent in 1979 — an average increase of about 38 percent.

In Chino, only two sales categories were lower in 1980. Building materials and farm implements dropped $539,000 from $3.6 million in first quarter 1979 to $3.1 million in 1980, about 15 percent. Auto sales slumped 3 percent — $120,000 — from $4.1 million in 1979 to $3.9 million.

Chino's biggest gains were in home furnishings, which soared 91 percent from $377,000 in 1979 to $720,000 in 1980. Apparel sales also fared well, jumping 62 percent from $324,000 in 1979 to $526,000 in 1980.

Chino gas sales leaped by 67 percent, from $3.2 million to $5.4 million, nearly a $2.2 million jump.

Total Chino sales climbed $5.5 million from $23.8 million to $29.3 million.

Complete Rancho Cucamonga figures in 1979 weren't available for comparison but total sales there rose 23 percent from $26.1 million to $32.2 million, an increase of about $6 million.

Upland fared well in almost all categories, experiencing a decline only in building material sales. Sales slumped 39 percent from $4.4 million in 1979 to $2.7 million in 1980, a drop of about $1.7 million.

Biggest Upland increases were in general merchandise, up 79 percent (2.1 million) from $2.7 million in 1979 to $4.8 million in 1980 and gasoline sales. Gas sales jumped 51 percent from $4.7 million in 1979 to $7.1 million in 1980, an extra $2.4 million for service stations.

Upland's car lots were the only ones in the West End which didn't report a sales decline. They increased sales by 13 percent, going from $6.5 million in 1979 to $7.3 million in 1980.

The city's overall figures rose nearly 8 million, from $42.4 million to $50.4 million.

Ontario nearly held its own against inflation, boosting total sales $12.6 million (16 percent) from $78 million last year to $90.6 million this year.

The city's biggest gains were in gasoline sales, up 54 percent, and building materials, up 32 percent. Service stations did $6.3 million more business, going from $11.8 million in 1979 to $18.1 million in 1980. About $1.3 million more in building materials were sold, boosting sales from $4.2 million in 1979 to $5.5 million in 1980.

Declines were in auto sales, down 14 percent, and home furnishings, down 6 percent. Car dealers' sales were down $2.7 million, dropping from $19.1 million in 1979 to $16.3 million in 1980. Home furnishings dropped by $120,000 from $1.8 million last year to $1.7 million this year.

Montclair experienced declines in general merchandise, auto sales, and other retail categories.

Total Montclair sales climbed only 3 percent.

Board behind restriction on gas tax use

The county Board of Supervisors has gone on record in support of a state constitutional amendment to restrict funds raised by the sales tax on gasoline to transportation uses.

On Monday, the board adopted a resolution backing ACA 74, the amendment by Assemblyman Walter Ingalls, D-Riverside.

The 6 percent sales tax was extended to gasoline sales in 1971 for the purpose of financing mass transit and road repairs and improvements. The legislation, the Transportation Development Act (SB 325), established a formula for returning part of the sales tax to counties and cities where it is collected.

Supervisor Robert Townsend asked for board support of ACA 74 in hopes of getting the measure on the statewide ballot in June 1982. The resolution urges the Assembly and Senate to put ACA 74 before the voters.

A report prepared by John Shone, the county director of transportation, notes that since the gasoline sales tax was introduced the share actually used on transportation has decreased.

About half the money raised by the tax now goes into the state's general fund, over which the Legislature has wide discretion for the use of revenue.

Townsend said the sales tax on gasoline is actually a "user tax" and its revenue should be spent on transportation.

"I feel it's somewhat of a rip-off for the consumer, because it's a consumer fee at the gas pumps," he said.

Shone told the board Ingalls' proposal has the backing of the County Supervisors Association of California and San Bernardino Associated Governments.

Poster children Marcell DesRosiers, left, and Jeffery Smith, both of Ontario, are preparing for the annual Altrusa Walk for the Handicapped this November. A 20-kilometer walk is planned through Ontario and Upland this year, past many of the historic buildings the area has to offer. Officials, who are expecting about 500 participants at the Nov. 11 event said proceeds will benefit local handicapped children.

County board votes 3-2 to delay election on levy for flood control

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

On a split vote, the county Board of Supervisors decided Monday to put off an election on continued assessments for flood control until March.

The vote came as a victory to West End city officials and members of the area's flood control advisory committee who had strongly supported holding the election next year instead of Nov. 4.

Representatives of all five West End cities have said the November election would be too soon to put together a comprehensive flood-control package and successfully present it to voters.

Flood Control Engineer C.J. "Dino" DiPietro told the board that meetings last week with four of the six flood control advisory committees, including Zone 1 in the West End, found sentiment split down the middle on the timing of the election.

With West End Supervisors Robert Townsend and Cal McElwain agreeing with other West End officials and Supervisors Bob Hammock and James Mayfield pressing for a November election, Supervisor Dennis Hansberger became the swing vote.

Hansberger said, "What I favor is a successful election."

He went on to say that he believed that arguments against holding the election in November were "specious."

However, Hansberger said he would go along with constituents in calling for a March election and hope for strong support from cities.

The "benefit assessment program" places levies on property according to its contribution to runoff problems.

DiPietro has said the county needs $500 million worth of regional flood-control facilities. He told the Zone 1 committee last week that the West End has total needs in regional facilities and in major and local storm drains of $300 million.

Voter approval is needed to extend the program beyond the first year of assessments, which come to $12.50 for the owner of a typical home on a 7,200-square-foot lot in the West End.

Hammock, whose district covers San Bernardino, noted his area was damaged the most by winter storms and stressed the need to get the construction program under way.

First-year assessments will finance some $7.6 million worth of repairs but no new construction.

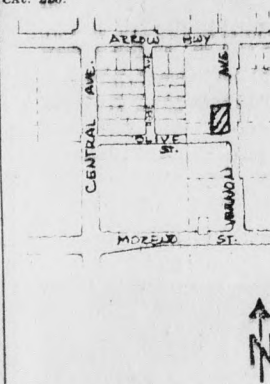

Townsend noted there was opposition to starting the program without voter approval and called the election in March, not November, an attempt at compromise.

"I favor a spring election — I can't support anything else," he said.

McElwain delayed the start of his vacation to join in voting for the March election.

Tear gas weaponry
Classes in tear gas

weaponry are being offered at Sears, Roebuck and Co. stores throughout California.

The two-hour certification classes are conducted by authorized personnel under the supervision and monitoring of the California Department of Justice. Those who successfully complete the course are awarded a certificate which is necessary to obtain a seven-year permit to carry a tear gas weapon in the state.

The state of California recently approved citizen use of tear gas devices as a form of self defense. provided that the user has obtained a state permit to carry such a weapon. Before a permit is granted, an applicant must have successfully completed a state-approved course, such as the one offered by Sears.

For information and enrollment in Los Angeles County call: South Bay area, 637-9925; San Fernando Valley area, 342-4720; Los Angeles metro area, 467-9669; San Gabriel Valley area, 443-9068.

For information and enrollment in Orange County call (714) 675-4211.

A small canister of gas may be carried by a licensed citizen, for use in warding off an aggressor. The canister can contain Chloroacetophenone, commonly known as tear gas. The chemicals stun a victim through painful, magnified tearing of the eyes, painful irritation of the lungs and shortness of breath, and an overwhelming feeling of helplessness. But the effects are not permanent and wear off in less than an hour.

The cost of the school is $30 which includes the permit.

Cougar's snarl keeps trainer on his toes

By JEANNIE GRAND
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — "We couldn't tell whether he thought he was human or we were cats," wild animal trainer Bob Steele says about the first cougar he trained.

Although the cat was virtually unapproachable when Steele first got him, constant attention finally won him over, the trainer says. Unfortunately, the cat had a fatal accident several years ago.

Steele is on a promotional trip with Tom Tom, the 130-pound cougar he has now that does the Cougar television commercials. Tari O, the Canadian lynx that does the new Lynx commercials and a 6-month-old jaguar named Squeaky.

Tom Tom, stretched out on a workbench in the garage of a local car dealership, languidly watches mechanics work on the cars he advertises. The pale gray eyes also watch Steele as he builds a cage for the cat to stay in while they travel around in his motor home.

When he is home, Steele says, the cougar lives in a Mercury station wagon, a fitting home for a cat whose famous snarl is synonymous with the car. Originally from Atlanta, the trainer has a home in West Palm Beach and is headquartered right now in Detroit.

Tom Tom flew out to California on, appropriately enough, Flying Tigers Airlines. After a two-month separation from his trainer, there was a joyous reunion when the cat arrived.

"He was absolutely beside himself," Steele says, looking at the cat who utters a deep meow in agreement.

The only way to describe this cat is elegant. The sleek animal, his luxurious fawn-colored coat stretched majestically over a finely-tuned muscular body, takes command of the workbench with regal force.

And while one might be lulled into a false sense of security by what appears to be a huggable big kitty, Steele is quick to point out the power of this wild animal.

The cougar, he says, could give anyone a hard time, although there have been no problems. Even without claws (all his cats are declawed) he could break a deer's neck with one slap of the paw. Steele recalls the time Tom Tom knocked him off a platform at an auto show with a playful slap.

But he is also gentle enough that Steele lets his 8-year-old daughter sit on cars with the cat at the auto shows.

But while there is the inevitable and necessary tension and caution between man and wild animal, Steele and the cougar seem to have established a rather simpatico relationship. The cat allows the trainer to play with him and reach in his mouth at will.

That plateau of friendship and trust has not yet been reached with Tari O, the lynx, who Steele has had for just two months. Nine years of being a zoo animal have made the smaller cat wary of humans, but he is responding to being touched, the trainer says.

Inside the motor home, Steele lets Tari O and Squeaky out of their respective cages and they romp playfully on the bed, the little jaguar cavorting like a kitten and the lynx letting fly with a succession of lightning-fast slaps.

Steele says being a wild animal trainer is a good life, one that he wouldn't trade because of the challenges.

"I raised domestic show cats for years," he says as Squeaky struggles and grunts in his lap. "Then I to winning visitors that although the cat is still small, the strict discipline is essential.

It won't be long before Squeaky is 100 pounds heavier and when that happens, he had better know that Steele is boss.

"The bigger they get, the harder it is," he says.

Working outside with the cougar, Steele also has to use a bit of discipline but he combines it with affection — a hug and rubbing behind the big cat's ears — which the cougar seems to enjoy.

"I really care for the animals," Steele says. "No matter how much discipline I have to give, I always go back and give affection." When he works with the cougar, he uses a light, leather riding crop, flicking it lightly across the animal's back or snapping it in the air beside his head.

"I use the crop to keep his attention. There are so many sounds and sometimes he doesn't hear me. He will be concentrating on one sound," the trainer says.

When he gives the vocal command "mouth" and waves the crop, the cougar's mouth goes into the famous commercial snarl.

"Nothing surpasses a cougar," Steele says.

Incidents of Bubonic plague increase in the west

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

SACRAMENTO — Bubonic plague, the "Black Death" that swept over Europe in the 1300s and killed a fourth of the population, is on the increase in California and other Western states — at least among the animal population — but this time man is ready with an effective treatment that will protect humans if it is used in time.

That is why a 55-year-old resident of Jolon, a rural community in the far south of Monterey County, is alive today, although he became the first plague victim of 1980 in California on June 5. Bitten, he believes, on June 3 by a tick while he was cleaning out an abandoned cabin on a ranch near Jolon, he was treated first by a doctor and then hospitalized. He was sent home, cured, on June 15 after treatment with antibiotics.

He was one of the lucky ones — more fortunate than a 6-year-old boy in the Golden Valley residential area eight miles north of Reno, Nev.

The boy apparently was bitten by a flea from a ground squirrel while riding his dirt bike in the hills near his home. Taken ill on June 7, his family neglected to take him to a doctor until the disease was far advanced, according to medical authorities at Reno. When medical aid finally was sought, it was too late. He died June 12, just 18 hours after being admitted to a hospital. He, too, had contracted bubonic plague.

Already in 1980, with the year only half over, California has recorded evidence of plague in 12 counties, mainly among infected wildlife captured by state and county health authorities. These include Alpine, Humboldt, Lassen, Mendocino, Modoc, Monterey, Nevada and Siskiyou counties in the north of the state; Kern, Los Angeles, Riverside, Santa Barbara counties in the south.

The disease is on the increase among animals, particularly rodents such as ground squirrels, chipmunks, wood rats, meadow mice, deer mice, varmints and tree squirrels — soaring suddenly to epidemic proportions in the animal population since 1975, according to the state Health Department's plague expert, Dr. Bernard Nelson, a senior public health biologist, in Berkeley.

"Bubonic plague is endemic in the foothills, plateaus and mountainous country of California, occurring seasonally with the arrival of warm weather," he said.

"Last year, bubonic plague occurred in 26 of the state's 58 counties, more than had ever been recorded for a single year in recent decades. By comparison," he pointed out, "evidence of the disease was found in 35 counties during the five-year period from 1975 to 1980."

This year, however, an ominous new factor is entering the picture, one that had its beginning in 1979 with the illness of a Diamond Bar resident on the outskirts of metropolitan Los Angeles.

When the man apparently handled a California ground squirrel and contracted the disease in his own yard in a new residential development six miles southwest of Pomona, it marked the first time since 1925 that a case of bubonic plague had been contracted in an urban - suburban situation," Nelson said.

This has particularly alarmed health officials, he pointed out, because it was the first case in recent times where mankind was endangered where he himself lives. "Bubonic plague always is a hazard when man goes to the animal habitat in the wilds, but here, with the growing encroachment of suburban housing developments into the foothills surrounding our cities, the infected animals are being found where humans and their house pets reside."

California, however, is not alone in its concern over a growing incidence of animal plague infection. So far this year, there have been five cases of human bubonic plague in the nation — the one in California, the one in Nevada and three in New Mexico. The disease seems to be associated primarily with the Far West, although animal — but not human — plague "isolates" have been observed as far east as one county in North Dakota.

Fighting fall's maladies: The battle of the roses

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service
Items from my gardening diary:

ROSE PROBLEMS: it seems that all sorts of maladies tend to crop up in our rose bushes in the late summer and early fall, or perhaps it's just that we notice them at a time when our gardening chores are tapering off and we have a chance to look at our plantings a little closer.

If the leaves are yellow and spotted, this could be the onset of black spot disease which is controlled by a dormant spray early in spring and weekly sprays or dustings during the season. If the leaves turn yellow with no sign of spot, this is usually due to too much moisture in the soil in early spring, or from drought in summer.

Also, if the yellow leaves are mostly on the lower part of the plant, it could be magnesium deficiency in the soil. To correct it, simply add magnesium sulfate (Epsom salts). If the yellow leaves are in top growth, it could be iron deficiency and in this case, add chelated or soluble forms of iron or spray iron sulfate on the leaves.

TULIP BULBETS: In dividing tulip bulbs, many gardeners keep the small bulbets and plant them in a special place where, given enough time, they'll grow into flowering sized bulbs.

In the fall, plant the bulbets in ground that has been well prepared with added humus and bone meal. They should be placed about 8 inches deep in sandy soil, 5 to 6 inches deep in heavy soil, and 6 inches apart.

They may need a season or two to send up foliage, ripen off and plump up before they arrive at flowering size. When the foliage has died down in summer, check one or two of the bulbs to see how they have sized up. Once they reach a size comparable to ones you have bought, then they can be planted up that autumn in your display area.

Given the patience to wait a season or two for the small bulbs to size up, the backyard gardener can save himself a bundle on the price of spring flowering bulbs.

BROWNING EVERGREENS: Just a reminder that the drying and browning of evergreens can be due to overly dry conditions and lack of water or red spider mites, or both.

At any rate, the best remedy is to take a strong jet of water from the garden hose with a spray nozzle on it and set it to the strongest spray you can get.

Direct it on to the evergreen foliage, where possible in a downward direction.

Treat all your evergreens like this at least once daily if you have the time. It corrects the dryness, promotes fast growth and prevents insects from becoming permanently ensconced in the foliage.

And in the event of a rather dry autumn, be sure not to send evergreen trees and shrubs (or deciduous ones for that matter) into winter dry. Keep the soil moist, mulch the area around the trunk, and keep up those sprayings.

FUNGUS GNATS: Have you ever noticed a few tiny dark flies around your houseplants? These are adult fungus gnats, a harmless nuisance.

However, the young are white maggots which can injure the roots and crown of the plants. The conditions in which they thrive are moist soil and an abundance of decaying plant matter.

So try to keep the soil a bit on the dry side. I have found scratching in just a few onion maggot granules into the soil gets rid of them, providing it is used with a very light hand, especially with African violets and gloxinias.
